THE EMERALD TABLETS OF THOTH THE ATLANTEAN

By
DR. M. DOREAL

When the time came for Thoth to leave Egypt, he erected the Great Pyramid over the entrance to the Great Halls of Amenti, placed in it his records and certain mechanical devices. He then appointed from among the highest of his people, guards to protect his mighty secrets. In later times, the descendents of these guards became the Pyramid Priests while Thoth was deified as the God of Wisdom, the Recorder, by those in the age of darkness which followed his passing. In legend, the Halls of Amenti became the Under-world, the Halls of the Gods where the soul passed after death for judgment. During later ages the ego of Thoth passed into the bodies of men in the manner described in the Tablets. As such he incarnated three times, and in his last incarnation he was known as Hermes, the Thrice-born.

The Brotherhood publications has produced a most attractive binding of Dr. Doreal's translation with a cover design of the original Tablets. The demand for this book on the Atlantean Mysteries has been so great that it is in its eleventh edition.

The Phoenix

By

THE SUPREME VOICE

(Dr. M. Doreal)

In a secret land, hidden among towering mountains lies the fabled paradise of the Phoenix. According to Eastern legend this land is not accessible to many, for it is separated by the power of God from all workers of evil. In that secret paradise the doorway to heaven is always open and the angels are constantly walking among its inhabitants. There, neither rain, nor snow, nor breath of frost, nor blaze of fire, nor heat of sun, nor cold, nor warmth, ever work harm. There the flowers ever blossom, the trees are ever green, and the birds always sing. When the great deluge overwhelmed the rest of earth, this glorious paradise remained untouched by the raging waters, through the grace of God.

In that land there is no enemy, no weeping or misery, no age, or sorrow, no death, no sin, no poverty, no sickness or sleep. The groves are hung with wonderful fruit and blossoms which never fade, for no touch of corruption may enter that holy land. It shall exist eternal, until He who created it shall bring it to an end.

A bird of wondrous beauty inhabits the forest; an immortal bird called Phoenix.

Men say that there he observes the course of the sun, ready to meet the candle of God, the flashing jewel; eagerly he watches for the time when the wondrous star of the Divine King shall rise in the East.

The noble bird bathes twelve times in the fountain of the waters of life, which flow eternal in the holy land. After he has bathed he flies aloft to the highest tree where he may observe the coming of the candle of God, the Sun. The moment the sun mounts high over the hidden land, the Phoenix mounts to the sky, singing as he flies toward the sun. His song is more wonderful than any son of man ever heard beneath the sky since the supreme King, Maker of Glory, established the Cosmos, the heavens and until the sun descends; then he lifts his head, thrice claps his swift pinions, and then is still. So ever, twelve times by day and night, he marks the hours.

It is appointed to the inhabitant of the wood that he may enjoy the secret land, until a thousand years have passed. Then the gray-plumed one, ancient and stricken in years, grows burdened. He flies from the secret land and visits a spacious realm of the world, where none abide, as his dwelling place and home. There he gains lordship over the birds of the air, and for a season dwells in the wilderness. Then, strong in flight, though weighed down with years, he departs westward. All about their noble leader throng the birds, ministering to him, until he gains the land of the Syrians. Here the pure one thrusts his retinue away and dwells alone in a desolate and shadowy spot, hidden from man. There he occupies a lofty tree, firmly rooted beneath the cape of heaven, a tree which men on earth call Phoenix, from the name of the bird. The illustrious King, Lord of mankind, hath granted to this tree the power of blossoming more beautifully than all others; nothing evil can harm it, while the world endures. In the wondrous tree the Phoenix builds his nest and from near and far assembles the sweetest and most delightful plants and leaves to perfume his dwelling. Great is his longing swiftly to convert, by the activity of his mind, old age to youth and life.

While the sun, the Jewel of heaven, shines hottest above the shadow in the summertime, he sits, ready for departure, surveying the world and enduring his fate. Suddenly his house becomes ignited by reason of the radiant sun: the spices glow, and the pleasant hall fumes with the sweet odors: the bird and his nest hum together in that fierce heat. The pyre is kindled; fire enfolds his house; fiercely devouring, the yellow flame hastens, the Phoenix, old with long-past years, is consumed, when once the fire seized upon his perishing body; his life, the doomed one's soul, escapes, when the flame of the funeral pile sears flesh and bone.

Yet in due season new life returns to him, when once the ashes begin, after the fires violence, to knit together, to cohere into a ball. When the bright nest is consumed, the corpse grows cold, the body is in pieces, and the flames subside. Then from the ashes of the pyre the likeness of an apple is afterwards found; out of it grows a beautiful worm, as if it had been hatched from an egg, bright from the shell. It grows in the shade, becoming first like the young of an eagle, then thrives until it resembles in size an old eagle; and afterwards is decked with bright plumage. His flesh is then renewed, born again, sundered from sin. He touches no earthly food, save that he tastes of the honeydew which oft descends at midnight; with this he supports his life until he again visits his own dwelling place, the ancient land.

When the glorious bird hath arisen, his life renewed, he collects from the dust the active body which fire had snatched away, the leavings of flame, and covers the booty of death with herbage, splendidly adorning it. He grasps with his talons the leavings of flame, and joyously directs his flight toward his home, his sun-bright seat, his blessed fatherland. He is wholly restored in life and plumage as he was in the beginning. There with the ashes he brings his own bones, which the fury of fire had wrapped in flame; there the wondrous bird buries in the secret land, bones and embers together. Renewed in himself is the ministrant of the Sun, what time the luminary of heaven, the most flashing of Jewels, rises over the ocean in splendor from the East.

The Brotherhood Newsletter

Dear Students and Friends:

Dr. Iris Rawls had charge of the Sunday evening Services. She spoke on Reincarnation and gave a very inspiring and interesting lecture.

Our weather has been damp and rainy, but the moisture was much needed, to bring forth the new plants of the Spring sowing.

We have received a most unusual announcement from a long-time Brotherhood Member, which I would like to share with you.

Vivianne Quinn from California, a Senior Citizen, will receive a B.A. degree from the University of Kentucky, May 13, 1972. Vivianne's Major is Political Science. We all surely extend congratulations to this persevering lady. How very true it is that age is not a bondage in attaining knowledge and wisdom. Neither is it a bondage in attaining Spiritual development and growth.

Many people think that after they reach the age of 25 or 30 years they are too old to return to school. But that is not true as has been proven by many of our Senior Citizens.

In Cosmic Harmony,

Dr. W. Whitby
